What made me choose Mount Sinai...

I chose Mount Sinai in large part due to the cerebrovascular program; the endovascular program lead by Dr. Mocco and Dr. Fifi is one of the busiest in the country and we have the opportunity to pursue training in an enfolded fellowship during residency, which I found very appealing.

Additionally, I felt that the resident atmosphere and culture was one that I fit into during my interview and second look at Mount Sinai, which made a strong impression when it came time to decide my rank list. I wanted to pursue training in a busy program that had exposure to a diverse patient population, and given our location in New York City, both Mount Sinai and our affiliate hospital in Elmhurst perfectly fit what I was looking for in that regard.

Mount Sinai is a world class institution, and our amazing faculty provide a fantastic operative and academic experience for the resident program. I think both the resident as well as departmental culture are incredibly supportive; one of the things that impressed me most while exploring programs was how Dr. Bederson and Dr. Mocco truly support the advancement of resident careers and pursuit of their own personal academic interests.
